

California's transitional housing program for former foster youth (THP-Plus) has been underspent each year for the last 3 years.

To promote full utilization of THP-Plus, John Burton Advocates for Youth has proposed a series of strategies, including increasing the rate paid to THP-Plus providers, which in many counties has not kept pace with the growth in housing costs, particularly in the midst of the state's housing crisis..

One approach to increase the THP-Plus rate is for the rate to reflect the cost of housing in each county, as measured by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development's Fair Market Rents.

Another approach is to establish a higher rate for youth who are custodial parents to reflect the increased costs of housing and providing supportive services to parenting youth.

Join us on this web seminar to learn more about these two strategies. County administrators and THP-Plus providers are encouraged to attend.
